th This book is published to commemorate the 50 Anniversary of the S.S. Huebner Foundation for Insurance Education. Administered at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, the Huebner Foundation was established in 1941 to strengthen insurance education at the collegiate level by increasing the number of professors specializing in insurance and enriching the literature in the field. The financial support of leading life insurance companies has enabled the Foundation to provide post-graduate education for prospective insurance teachers and scholars. Through its fellowship program, the Foundation supports students in the Ph.D. program in Risk and Insurance at the Wharton School. The success of the Foundation is measured by the accomplishments of its alumni. Former Huebner Fellows play leading roles in every major area of insurance education. Fellows teach insurance to tens of thousands of undergraduate and MBA students each year and have written hundreds of books and thousands of articles on insurance. Fellows hold leadership positions at the American College, the Life Office Management Association, and the Certified Employee Benefit Specialist Program. The Foundation was created in honor of Dr. Solomon S. Huebner, a pioneer in insurance education. Dr. Huebner taught the first organized course on the economics of insurance ever offered at the collegiate level in 1904. An internationally recognized author and teacher, Dr. Huebner had a profound impact on both insurance education and the insurance industry. He served on the faculty of the Wharton School for more than nearly fifty years. Master's Thesis from the year 2004 in the subject Business economics - Banking, Stock Exchanges, Insurance, Accounting, grade: 2 (B), LMU Munich (Seminar for Insurance Studies), 20 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: The capital forming life insurance appears currently to be in a very vulnerable state. It was usually an attractive investment opportunity with stable returns comparable to other investment opportunities. In 2000-2002 it was difficult for the life insurance companies to overcome the consequences of the stock market crises, the losses of the insurance companies were enormous. Today there is another challenge for the insurance companies to overcome – the end of the tax privilege starting in 2005. These events bring our attention to the problem of profit sharing. In this paper I show that the changes in the tax law related to the life insurance profits in Germany lead to an increased competition for new customers in 2004 by paying maximum possible bonus rates and to the drastic decrease of it in 2005 which will force the insurers to look for alternative methods to attract new customers like implicit options embedded in the insurance contracts. Such options are liabilities to the issuer, they also constitute a potential danger to the company's solvency. Therefore, they should be properly valued. Historically that has not been done which turned out to be a disaster for some companies. In the first chapter of this work I introduce the mechanism of profit sharing, its legal framework, the changes in the tax law crucial for the insurance companies and my own model describing how the insurer actually chooses the bonus rate of the insurance contract. Furthermore, the predictions about bonus rates in 2005 and its signification for the options will be made. The second chapter is devoted to the definition, classification and the examples of the most common implicit options on the German life insurance market. The third chapter shows the most common models of the valuation of interest rate and asset options. The tree models will be described particularly in detail. The fourth chapter is dedicated to the models of valuation of the non-European options in life insurance contracts. Excerpt from The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company: Its History, Its Present Position in the Insurance World, Its Home Office Building and Its Work Carried on Therein A History of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company was issued in 1908 to mark its 40th year as a life company and at the same time the practical completion of its great Home Office building. The volume contained a history of the Company and something of its position in the world of insurance at that time, with a description, sufficiently illustrated, to bring before the eye of the interested reader the building, which was the largest business building in the world, its various novel, beautiful and useful features and the great work carried on within its walls. Since that volume was issued the Company has more than maintained its position in the insurance field, and in 1914 finds itself with a greater amount of insurance in force than any other company in the world. Coincidentally with this growth the Company has entered upon a great work for the benefit of its policyholders, entirely beyond any obligation implied in its policy contracts. It has taken place among the foremost agencies in the conservation of human life, having carried on a campaign of education in the interests of improved health, established a free nursing service for all Industrial policy-holders whose circumstances are such that they need it, erected a sanatorium for those of its employees afflicted with tuberculosis, and engaged systematically in welfare work along the lines of modern thought among the millions of industrial workers who are its policy-holders. The Metropolitan building is now the business home of many thousand people, while visitors whose interests bring them to it daily equal the population of many of the thriving cities of the country. This present volume contains the early history of the Company, a summary of its business to the year 1914, and an outline of the collateral welfare work which the Company is doing. It is issued in the belief that it will be of interest to the field force, which has made the Company what it is; to the policy-holders, who are the Company in a very true sense; to the tenants of the building, their visitors and friends. The words of the preface to the earlier edition are still true. All who come under the roof of the Metropolitan home are welcome. All who accept insurance issued from it are members of its household, and all who read this book are invited to become a part of our happy family. With all of this as background, the book continues with more detail and discusses the various functions performed by distribution, and how distribution systems are managed today. It also goes into more specifics regarding the compensation and the economics of distribution. The text concludes with a discussion of managing distribution channel conflict, and how distribution of life insurance is expected to evolve in the near future. This book is designed to simplify some of the concepts surrounding cash value life insurance, such as Infinite Banking and Bank on Yourself, and make them easier to understand, stripping them down to the core benefits of cash value life insurance. In the industrialized countries, around the end of the nineteenth century the life insurance companies started integrating death into the business world. The process of monetarizing life was born. This paper examines how the term life insurance can be defined and which kinds of life insurance exist, focusing on the two countries Germany and the United States. It will show that there are mainly three types of life insurances as well in Germany as in the United States which are term life insurance, endowment insurance and annuity insurance. Focusing then on the consumption of life insurances the different factors of demographic, economic and institutional determinants will be taken into account and examined again for both countries, Germany and the United States. After explaining what the different factors influencing life insurance consumption are and how they correlate to the consumption it is being analyzed which risks insurance companies are facing today and will face in the future. The main risks are lower life insurance consumption due to the (external) influencing factors and longevity risk.
